Any ideas why this happens or is it to do with my drivers? A: How about your kernel log? Do you have any messages in it that are somehow related to your audio card? Edit: Here is a screenshot of some stuff from my log: In the log you can see a message about something happening to the ALSA driver (Line 87). So at least, the driver is configured properly. Your problem could also be that your kernel lacks drivers for your audio card, or that your audio card has an incompatibility with your kernel. But since you've said your audio card is soundblaster x-fi elite pro, there is something more than that. You probably have an older kernel, as the audio in this kernel has some known bugs. And I'm running an upgraded ubuntu with kernel 4.4 so I'm not sure if that is a safe way to install an older kernel. Eighteen years ago, a small, simple book could make a big difference for children. The Hero Book was an opportunity to tell the story of what was going on in the world around children and the values they were being taught. It featured gorgeous illustrations that were as important for children as the words. It was a book for children to learn from, not a set of children's stories that were hard to get to the bottom of. For children, The Hero Book looked great. Its pictures informed and inspired. Its talk of the Power of Law, the stories of champions and the message of Living Your Life created a sense of something bigger, something very important that children could understand and respond to. For educators, and parents, it was the gift that kept on giving. Teachers would keep a copy around to help children with homework problems or students would keep one for themselves. Often it would be handed out with a talk and conversation about it. As far as I know, it was only a book, and not a computer game or a DVD, but it spoke volumes about a topic that is significant to the lives of all children. I was sorry to hear of the recent news that this book and the enduring effort of the authors is going to be pulled from every school in America, replaced with the now standard American textbooks where children will read the same stories they've read since childhood. But something else is now being dropped, something that has been lost as well, and something that I suspect will be one of
