I have an action called restore which deletes all rows where the user id is not provided and restarts the engine (thus, redoing the process it did previously). I was going to add an ajax call to the delete button so that the user could approve to the deletion of records. My question is, where is the best place to put the ajax call? Can i do it in the controller and have the ajax call do the delete request? A: You can either do it in the view, like this: = form_tag your_path, :method => :delete do = button_to "Delete stuff", [:action => :delete], :id => "delete_stuff", :method => :delete In the same way that you would submit a form normally. Or you could do it in your controller, and just set the flash in your ajax call. The controller way: def delete @record_to_delete = Record.where(id: params[:id])

@record_to_delete.destroy redirect_to your_path end But this

Whether they are featured in contemporary portraiture or in a nostalgic, vintage style, they are always welcoming and happily doing their cute doggie thing. We created a red, black and white pattern in homage to dachshunds. By the time Grace's mom and dad were done picking her up from the vet's office, the photographer arrived. He immediately captured a photo of Grace's mom and dad while they were hugging Grace's injured leg. Next we brought Ethel out to the recording studio to be interviewed by the sound engineer for a radio broadcast. Ethel is a great cat! We did a studio
