The association between Alzheimer's disease and visual and motor symptoms is a topic that has recently begun to attract the interest of neuroscientists. Several lines of evidence are now pointing to the existence of shared pathophysiological processes in Alzheimer's disease and in eye and motor diseases. However, the clinical manifestations and underlying mechanisms are very different and it is not clear how this translates into pathogenic mechanisms or treatment efficacy. In this review, we will discuss the possible relations between ophthalmic and motor symptoms and Alzheimer's disease, including the co-existence of these symptoms, their possible pathophysiological bases, their possible contribution to cognition and their role as an early or late symptom of dementia.
Nov. 13 (UPI) -- Researchers say they have created artificial intelligence that can learn on its own and adapt to the changing environment. The software is designed to teach itself what is needed to help a robot function in its environment, while providing a form of resilience for the device. "Our research has shown that artificial intelligence that can learn on its own and adapt to the changing environment is possible," said Yujia Li of the University of Wisconsin-Madison. "This is potentially a major breakthrough, as machines with such capability promise to solve a broad range of problems that we cannot imagine humans will be able to solve." RELATED Researchers develop new way to see inside brains The artificial intelligence software, known as AIBO, has been created using LSTM, a standard artificial intelligence technique. The software used a "memory" cell to store previous data provided by the network and a "learning" cell to judge whether the robot needed to learn more information or make

There is no charge for this event. The American Academy of PA Chiropractic will host a free seminar on the effects of the COVID-19 pandemic on the chiropractic profession and the nation, on Wednesday, March 11. Join us for the AACP's first online seminar for its Mobile Chiropractic Service Delivery network. This is an opportunity for chiropractic offices to hear from a panel of healthcare professionals and include professionals who have experience with delivering quality care during this pandemic. The panel will provide practical information on how to counsel patients and the general public, including tips for making sure patients follow proper self-isolation, and have a safe, effective, and healthy recovery. The seminar will discuss practical tips for chiropractic practitioners and their patients on navigating the wellness counseling process, including how to utilize telemedicine, and how telemedicine can assist in the health and well-being of our patients and the community. The session will highlight how the pandemic has affected the National Chiropractic Association and American Chiropractic Association and the American Academy of Pain Management and have created a space for public input and discussion. It will also provide info about how chiropractic is serving as a model for the nation's healthcare system during this global health crisis and what the future holds. This event will not only provide information for chiropractic providers but may also be of great interest for the public at large. The program will include: Panelists and Moderator: Ms. Kathryn A. Bennett, PhD, RD, H.E.P, DC, FAAN, Director, Nutrition and Wellness; American Chiropractic Association Mr.

This study investigated whether muscle fatigue could be monitored in a real-time manner using an electromyographic (EMG) technology based on muscle-tendon biomechanics in an isometric contraction mode. We hypothesised that the wireless EMG electrode output would be degraded by muscle fatigue in both the isometric and concentric contraction modes. EMG electrode outputs were recorded from the vastus lateralis during 60 s of isometric and concentric contractions at a contraction mode that is commonly used to measure the isometric maximal voluntary contraction (iMVC) and MVC (MVC) in a dynamic muscle strengthening exercise, i.e. a leg press exercise. The recorded EMG signals were then analysed to determine the signal quality (i.e. the signal-to-noise ratio) of the EMG electrode during each contraction. The signal quality of the EMG electrode was also calculated by comparing the power spectrum densities of the original EMG signal with those of the EMG signal after filtering. The subjects were four male college students who participated in the experiments. The signal quality dropped during both the isometric and concentric contractions. The signal quality became lower than 10 dB during the 3rd and 4th contraction for isometric and concentric contraction modes, respectively. The EMG electrode could not detect muscle fatigue in a real-time manner in both the isometric and concentric contraction modes. A new EMG electrode that can effectively detect muscle fatigue
