Is it possible to configure AWS Lambda to access resources from multiple accounts? I'm trying to use Lambda in an environment with multiple AWS accounts and is unable to find any info about this. A: In the AWS Lambda console, you have to add each account that you wish to use. When you run the function, the code will check whether it has access, then perform the correct operation. So, no you do not have to set up the account in the console, but only in the code, and it will work fine. Here is the documentation: Q: How to pass an array value from one controller to another controller The webApp's controller need to pass the userId array variable to the second controller. How to pass in angularjs. The data is arrived from mongodb after logging in. app.js code app.factory('User', function($http, $rootScope, $q, $location, $window) { var userFactory = {}; userFactory.getUser = function() { return $http.get(" + $root
