A friend asked me about the following statement: There is no map $f:A\rightarrow B$ that is surjective but not injective. This is what I think but I am not sure if it is correct: Let us assume the statement to be false then it is possible to find a map $f:A\rightarrow B$ which is injective but not surjective. Assume that $x\in A$ and $f(x)=0$, then f is injective, but f is not surjective. Can someone please explain how to show that the statement is false? Is it easy to do or is it a trick that is hard to grasp? A: Suppose there is such a map $f : A \rightarrow B$. Then it is injective, and therefore the image $f(A) = f \left(\bigcup_{a \in A} \{a\} \right)$ is the union of a disjoint collection of open sets in B . Since B is compact, its open sets cover B , and so there is some subset of A that meets every open set of B . Since f is not surject
